DAVID

British Syrian Society

David Freeman is a solicitor based in London. He has worked with clients from the Middle East for over twenty years and specialises in international tax, commercial matters, wealth planning and company law.

This combination of work has led to the development of a practice that helps families and businesses with a wide variety of matters. David also advises on the establishment of charities and other not for profit organizations (and helped in the formation of the British Syrian Society) that help people in the Middle East. He is company secretary of UK charity, Medical Aid for Palestinians and is Chairman of the Welfare Association, a UK based charity that helps Palestinians in West Bank, Gaza and Lebanon (which works closely with the Swiss Charity of the same name). He is involved in helping many other similar organisations on a pro bono basis.

David writes articles on international tax, immigration and UK political issues for Al Hayat, and has written for other newspapers including the Financial Times and Al Khaleej.

He has appeared on MBC, Sky News and ITN commenting on immigration and other legal issues in the UK.
